

The Village

by Ucaimhu

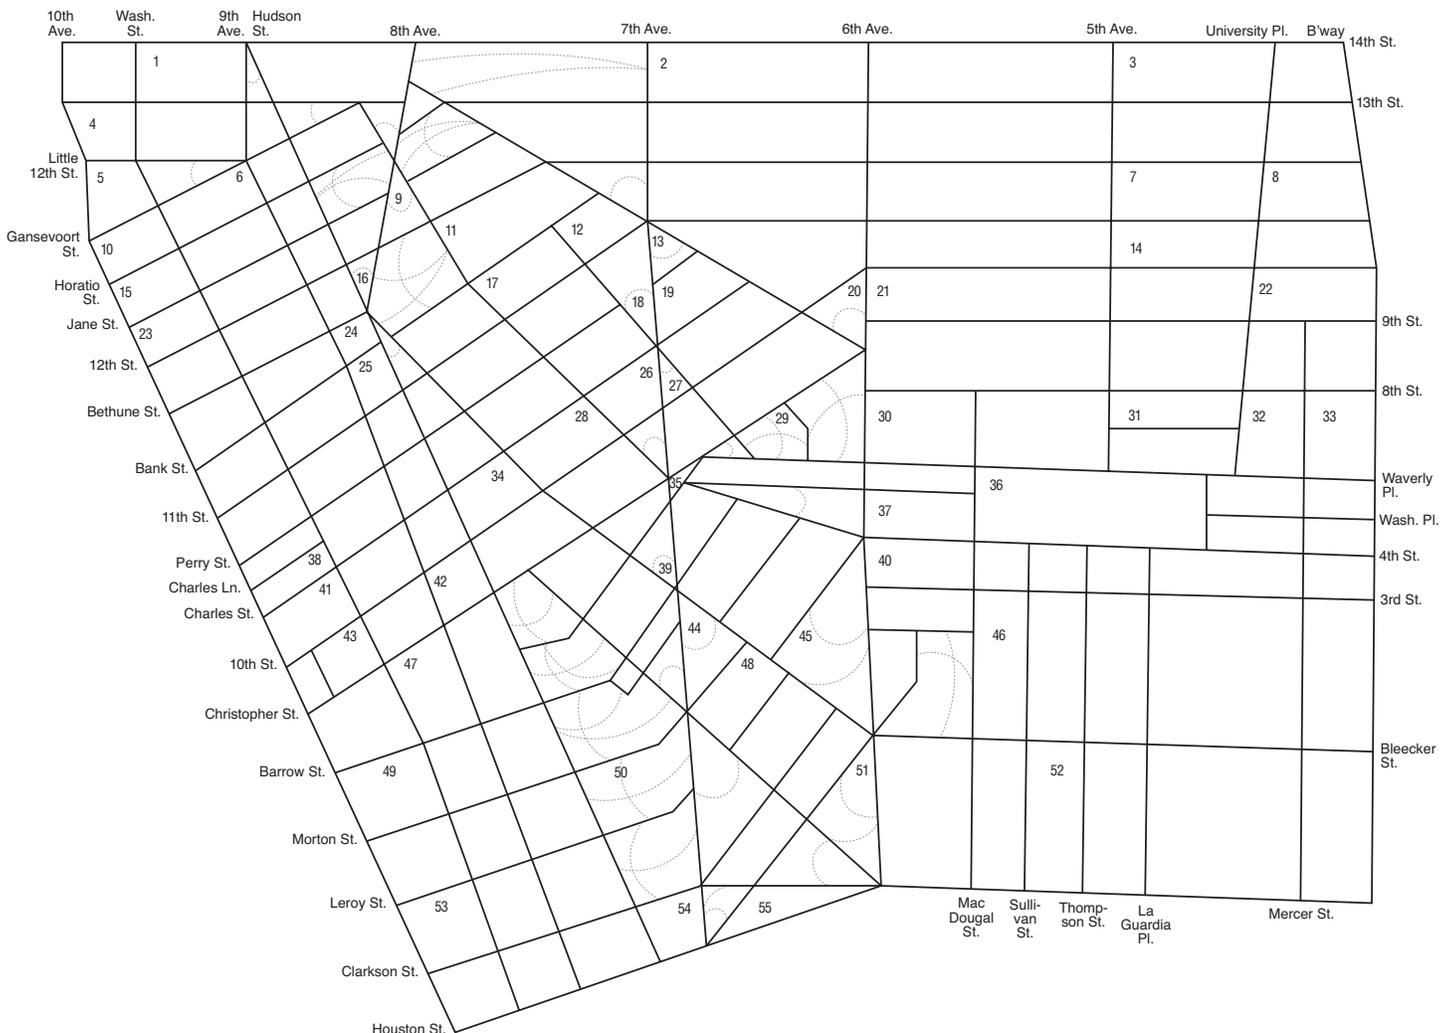

While we get together in Newark, they get together (as a convention) in Central Park. They also get together in front of the lions at the library, and right next to the Empire State Building. And they even get together in the Village, though given its often chaotic geography (see the map below for details) it can be difficult to figure out just where. In this puzzle, you will.

Half of the clues for this cryptic crossword contain an extraneous letter (which must be removed before solving). These (appropriately!) extraneous letters:

- (1) Briefly state the identity of each one of the conveners, and
- (2) Indicate where in those clues to find two quotations from a song whose (chorus's) first line provides a more complete identification.

The other half of the clues work normally; however, their answers each contain a letter (not the first letter) that must not be entered into a grid “square,” but instead must be left on a line segment (where it is “invisible” to all other words crossing that segment). Half of these extra letters will give a solution path many will take advantage of — they spell out an appropriate (and accurate, though misleading) literary quotation. The other half indicate where the Village get-together takes place, and give an appropriate, if fanciful, name for that location.

(Note: The street names included around the edges of the map are intended to give a general idea of Village geography; they do not constitute a complete name guide for the streets of the Village, since not every street has been labeled with a name, and even one that has been might not in reality keep the same name for its entire length.)

Rules For Entering Answers

Each clue is given with its answer's starting "square" (henceforth called a "block," since it corresponds to a city block) and an arrow indicating which direction the answer leaves its starting block in. For any other block, what sides an answer may cross to leave will depend on what side it crossed when it came in. Four-sided blocks work normally; if an answer comes into a block across one side, it cannot leave except across the opposite side. For blocks with other numbers of sides, the gray arcs (of which a given block may have none, one, two or three) determine the exit possibilities; if an answer enters and leaves a block through two sides, those sides must be connected by a gray arc. (Not every arc in the grid will actually be "used" by some answer, however.)

If an answer may leave a block through a given side, it may go to any block that connects with that block on that side. For example, if an answer came into block 18 through its lower left-hand side, that answer could leave through the right-hand side, and thus could go to block 13 or 19. (Corners don't count, though; it couldn't go to block 27, say.)
